At this point, we want to showcase the waking up of different parts of the body. I see this all done in a choreographically style, in a kind of looped movement. It is not exactly dancing. I imagine a sequence with a fist that opens up in an harmonious yawn of fingers which then matches with a shot of the eyes that start to open up, a little wiggle to get some other part of the body wet with some swag... a really low shot where the heel starts to rise in super slow mo. Almost like it's levitating, then the moment when he grabs the removable shower head with a rhythmic finger tapping on it that coincides with the music's beat (and water drops!), a shot where he turns spectacularly with the shower head in hand and water flying magnificently.
